al has indeed been settled by the mutual consent of the ilensberger and zwolsler families in an agreement that protects both the sextons reputation and that of the ile ningen" blurb. Judge ann gehenkel published a statement in all the papers on june 2 addressing the issue and has not been contacted by the judge's office or parties. The judge ruled that the matter "is no longer before him", has set aside his decision and has vacated the order appointing an advocate. Judge gehenkel subsequently issued an opinion explaining his decision and was written to the parties. It concluded that while the sextons were the instigators of the proceedings and argued that the appointment of the advocate was improper and "an abuse of process, a cursory reading of the transcript provides little evidence of this. "The case has been settled and, in this sense, is not before me." the judge added that "whether the case was not validly commenced by the ile ningen is not before me and not the subject of my consideration.... the settlement should be approved and the order declaring the matter settled should be discharged". The judge also said "this proceeding should have never been initiated" and criticised the sextons lawyers for making reference to the length of the appointment of the advocate and by filing papers containing inflammatory and inaccurate claims.
